Abstract:
Fantasy literature has grown in popularity over the last ten years, becoming both a part of pop culture as well as a part of the literary canon. Series such as the Lord of the Rings and Harry Potter have introduced much of the reading world to the wonders of fantasy literature. However, in traditional fiction classes, fantasy is considered genre writing and is frowned upon. Contained within this thesis are the plans for an Honors colloquium in fantasy writing. This class combines both reading and writing fantasy literature. After taking this colloquium, students should gain a better understanding of creating and reading fantasy literature, as well as learning more about themselves as writers.

Honor roll, membership in an honors society, AP Scholar — such awards are fairly common and can all serve to add another dimension to your application. If you have the opposite problem and feel as though you don’t have enough space to list all your honors and awards, begin by listing those which are most selective or competitive, and then those most relevant to your potential major or desired career path. Anamaria is an Economics major at Columbia University who’s passionate about sharing her knowledge of admissions with students facing the applications process. When she’s not writing for the CollegeVine blog, she’s studying Russian literature and testing the limits of how much coffee one single person can consume in a day. Other articles by Anamaria. I would also like to thank the Honors College because they have enabled me to seek out interests to support my major courses. Joanne Edmonds’s patience and support was very helpful to my development throughout the course of my college years. Lastly, I would like to thank Wes Janz, my thesis advisor. With his guidance I was able to discover the importance of social problems in relation to the field of architecture. Through his seminar, One Small Project, I was able to wrestle with ideas that I had previously ignored. The Honors Thesis is open to students from all majors. While most RH projects culminate in a traditional research thesis, students majoring in the arts may complete a thesis by crafting an original artistic work. Research thesis: an original research project culminating in a written thesis that aligns with academic standards of the student’s field of study. Examples of creative thesis projects include choreographing a dance, writing a novella or collection of short stories, or composing a complex piece of music. Your Thesis Committee. Honors College Faculty Member – an Honors professor who represents the Honors College. It is the responsibility of the RH student to confirm their Faculty Advisor and additional Committee Member. It is open to students who are entering their 4th year of the following Department of Biology programs: Honours Biology, Honours Biochemistry, Honours Biomedical Sciences, Honours Environmental Science (Ecology specialization), and Honours Life Physics (Biophysics specialization).
