But what makes a book good? A captivating story and character development are always key indicators for me, which explains why I would much rather read a book than watch a movie. The author needs to be able to write the story in a way that attracts a reader and keeps the reader's attention. Personally, I choose to read a variety of books and thus enjoy a wide range of books from historical fiction to YA to non-fiction to biographies to mysteries to award winning novels whereas I know friends who read only a single style of book or a single author and have no desire to expand their reading. The reader ultimately decides what makes a book good and itself presents a challenge in defining a good book every person is unique. What Keeps Me Here book. Brown writes surreal horror in stories such as "The Princess and the Pea", and "What Keeps Me Here" which were incredibly unsettling considering the brevity of words and the lack of flowery prose or description. My two favourite, "Faith" and "The Relationship" were less surreal, but still haunting. Her sentences are stripped down and cold and the stories lin Woah. I've read quite a few collections of short stories by various authors lately and each has been so unique but this one undubitably so. I saw this (visually) beautiful book at tonight's BookCrossing Meetup, and I don't have any short stories in the pile by my bed, so I thought I'd just go ahead and add another one to the stack. The opening of the first story was enough to hook me in. Journal Entry 3 by xacharias at -- By post or by hand-ie ring, trade, RABCK, meet in Seattle, Washington USA on Tuesday, October 14, 2003. I think the auteur nature of it, having total control of everything I donâ€™t have producers and designers telling me what to do. And then you look around and, month after month, the bar is being raised and I want to be a part of that. KF. I think my favourite of last year was Saving Grace by Grace Wilson â€“ the story of an art school graduate trying to make it in London and survive the exorbitant rental market here, so obviously it spoke to me on some level! Whatâ€™s your favourite graphic novel? I had done childrenâ€™s picture books before, and had just finished one on Buster Keaton, but Iâ€™d never done a graphic novel or anything with bubbles coming out of peopleâ€™s mouths.
