Abstract
This thesis sheds light on the multiple identities of the Hispanic people of the Española Valley in Northern New Mexico, a population that to outsiders is commonly misunderstood and stereotyped. It is a population regarded with some mystery, awe, and admiration, as well as fear and hatred, a population that even to itself sometimes remains an enigma. The qualitative study undertaken examined the culture and life experiences of 11 native Hispanics living in this community and explored their perspectives on gender and generational differences. Data were collected through individual, semi-structured interviews, which were then analyzed through a recursive process of reading transcripts, coding and categorizing. The themes that emerged, including but not limited to land, religion, education and economics, are presented, and implications and recommendations are discussed.

Federal authorities still haven't searched the sprawling estate near Stanley, New Mexico. | iHeartRadio. An anonymous sub-contractor has come forward with video and photos of Jeffrey Epstein's mysterious property in New Mexico known as Zorro Ranch, video from RockofTalk.com shows. Eddy Aragon, host at Rock of Talk, interviewed a man who claimed to have been to the Zorro Ranch multiple times over the last few years and had interacted directly with Jeffrey Epstein, Ghislaine Maxwell, as well as other staff who worked on the ranch. The ranch, where Epstein is alleged to have sexually abused multiple victims, has not been searched by federal authorities, according to a report. The multi-millona
