A finding aid, in the context of archival science, is a tool containing detailed, indexed, and processed information about a specific collection of records within an archive. Finding aids often consist of a documentary inventory and description of the materials, their source, and their structure. The finding aid for a collection is usually compiled by the collection's entity of origin, provenance, or by an archivist or librarian during archival processing. The finding aid serves the purpose of providing information on the cost of attendance at the college for an academic year and to detail any grants, scholarships, work-study opportunities and loans the student is eligible to receive. The exact timing of when the letters are sent varies across institutions. Each year, the Department of Education announces any changes to the process for the coming cycle that affect how financial aid offices award aid to students. After submitting the FAFSA, students should receive an email within a few days from the Department of Education containing the Student Aid Report, which provides their expected family contribution, or EFC, a number that measures their ability to pay for college. Visual aids engage students and help them to retain information. This guide will show you 10 essential visual aids for learning you should be using. Look for opportunities to present information visually in your presentations, handouts, and reports, and find a chart that fits that type of information. For example, a classic pyramid chart is effective for visualizing a topic in different levels: Create this pyramid chart. For example, this newsletter template uses the school's colors of orange for the headers and blue for the sub-headers: Use this newsletter template. Exam Review. | | Art to the aid of technology. What caricatures can teach us about facial recognition. Our brains are incredibly agile machines, and it is hard to think of anything they do more efficiently than recognize faces. Just hours after birth, the eyes of newborns are drawn to facelike patterns. Caricature is basically finding the truth. And then you push the truth. Capturing a likeness, it seems, has less to do with the depiction of individual features than with their placement in relationship to one another. It's how the human brain recognizes a face. When the ratios between the features are correct, you see that face instantly.
