Congregational Leadership and Spirituality in the Postmodern Era

Sandra Marie Schneiders, Jesuit School of Theology/Graduate Theological Union

Document Type
Article

Publication Date
1-1998

Publisher
Jesuits of the Missouri Province

Abstract
In addressing the issue of leadership in congregations which are increasingly influenced by the emergence of cultural postmodernism, I write not as one who is engaged in leadership or trained in the fields of organization and management, but as a theologian reflecting on the spirituality of contemporary religious. But part of my preparation for these reflections involved talking with a number of religious in leadership positions, asking them what were the major challenges they faced as leaders.

Comments
This paper presented, here slightly revised, to the Leadership Conference of Women Religious on 23 August 1997 in Rochester, New York.

Copyright U.S. Central and Southern Province, Society of Jesus. Permission is hereby granted to copy and distribute individual articles for personal, classroom, or workshop use. Please credit Review for Religious and reference the volume, issue, and page number and cite Saint Louis University Libraries as the host of the digital collection.

Recommended Citation

In addressing the issue of leadership in congregations which are increasingly influenced by the emergence of cultural postmodernism, I write not as one who is engaged in leadership or trained in the fields of organization and management, but as a theologian reflecting on the spirituality of contemporary religious. But part of my preparation for these reflections involved talking with a number of religious in leadership positions, asking them what were the major challenges they faced as leaders.

What is prime reality? Prime reality evokes questions of the existence of God. Does God, a supreme being, really exist? Is there an existence of God? And should there be a God, how is the likeness of God...