Imagine reading the scrapbook of an Eighth Air Force airman who flew missions from England to Germany and occupied Europe in World War II. A book with personal mementos, pictures, documents, and news clippings from dangerous missions could document the service of one of the thousands who flew those missions or perhaps one of the 47,000 who died in that campaign. Reading the book would be a way to view historical events from the perspective of a person who lived through the combat.

Gregory Pons has greatly improved on the idea of an individual scrapbook. He collected the scrapbooks of fourteen different airmen and added captions,...
This book features over 100 large format photographs of actual missions, planes and crews from World War Two. Gregory Pons is one of Europe's foremost experts on American military aviation in World War Two, and a leading collector of Air Force memorabilia and photograph albums. He is a regular contributor to Militaria magazine.

Customer reviews:

The American 8th Air Force contributed mightily to the defeat of Nazi Germany. When the 8th was formed in 1942, it had just a few men and no planes. It took two years and a great many casualties, and a great many lost aircraft before the 8th could compete on equal terms with the German Luftwaffe. The introduction of long range fighter aircraft, such as the P-51 Mustang, greatly assisted the 8th Air Force. These brave men fought a battle in which there was no where to run, if you were injured or your plane was shot down. The paved the way for the D-Day landings, which could not have succeeded w... Very nice book, lots of pictures and the writing is well done. A good overview of the 8th and the jobs of the crewmen on bombers. Read more. 2 people found this helpful.
