Hiking to the "Real" Northernmost Point. Performing Identity on the way to Knivskjellodden

Sammendrag

Summary: Over the last decade hiking tourism has grown in Norway. This is exemplified by the increasing numbers of tourists that visits Trolltunga, Prekestolen and Kjerag. These are the most prominent examples, which appears to be part of a larger trend. Knivskjellodden has likewise, seen a rise in visitor numbers over the last decade. This aim of this thesis is to build an understanding of the meaning people attach to their hike to Knivskjellodden. This phenomenon will be explored through Edensor’s (2000, 2001, 2007) theories on performance in tourism. During the analysis it is reflected upon how identity is constructed through performances where ’self’ is attached to activity, places and a certain way of traveling.

Knivskjelodden or Knivskjelodden is a peninsula located in Nordkapp Municipality in Troms og Finnmark county, Norway. It is the northernmost point on the island of Magerøya in Northern Norway. It is sometimes considered the northernmost point of the entire continent of Europe. The nearby Kinnarodden on the Nordkinn Peninsula is the northernmost point on the mainland. Nice hike to the most northern part. I found the hike quite a challenge to be honest. The path is well marked but rough. Very rocky, steep parts and sometimes muddy and slippery. more less. The real northernmost point in Europe. Farther out than the Nordkapp globe with the rough. About 18km hike there and back. On 03 June 2013 Lee and I hiked to the real northernmost point of Europe, located in Norway. The place is called Knivskjelodden. It is on a peninsula just to the west of Nord Kapp where all the tourists go, believing they are at the farthest north point. Soft, Arctic tundra. We head to the point on the horizon. A stone cairn. We're on the right track. We continue from cairn to cairn...to cairn...to cairn. We cross mushy places. We continue going from cairn On the other hand, more than half the adults in the UK are currently heavier than the recommended weight. About two in five adults are classified as being overweight and about a further one in Practice Test 1 Practice Test 1 Test 1 CAE Practice Test 1 five is obese. In fact, in the past 20 years the number of obese adults in the UK has nearly tripled, and the effects are devastating. The National Audit Office says that if we had one million fewer obese people in this country, there would be 15,000 fewer cases of coronary heart disease, 34,000 fewer cases of type 2 diabetes, and 99,000 fewer cases of type 2 diabetes, and 99,000 fewer cases of type 2 diabetes, and 99,000 fewer cases of type 2 diabetes, and 99,000 fewer cases of type 2 diabetes. They travel to northern Norway, usually on packages that guarantee you will reach the North Cape, or Nordkapp, a tourist trap marginally less tacky than Land's End. There, they take pictures of one another, arms raised in celebration by a globe, before buying a souvenir cuddly troll. But when they study their photographs later they may just notice a straggly peninsula in the background, finger-like in aspect and almost wagging in triumph. The starting point for Knivskjelodden is well signposted, 15 miles north of Mageroya’s only town, Honningsvag. The track, often rocky or boggy, is waymarked all the way with giant cairns. The landscape is stark, yet infinitely varied, and drably beautiful.
